

In New York Minute Everything Did Change

A Memoir of the 21st Century

I came to New York City in 2001, a young woman with big dreams and a head full of ideas. I had always been drawn to the city's energy and excitement, and I couldn't wait to experience it for myself.

I quickly found a job in publishing, and I soon settled into a routine of work, friends, and the occasional night out. I loved my life in New York, and I couldn't imagine living anywhere else.

Then, on September 11, 2001, everything changed. I was working in my office when the first plane hit the World Trade Center. I looked out the window and saw the smoke billowing into the sky. I knew that something terrible had happened, but I didn't know what.

I spent the rest of the day in a state of shock. I couldn't believe that something like this could happen in my city, in my country. I watched the news in disbelief, as the towers collapsed and the death toll rose.

In the aftermath of the attacks, I struggled to come to terms with what had happened. I lost friends in the attacks, and I saw the city I loved change before my eyes. I felt lost and alone, and I didn't know what to do.

But I also saw the best of humanity in the aftermath of the attacks. I saw people coming together to help each other, and I saw a spirit of resilience that I had never seen before. I knew that New York City would survive, and I knew that I wanted to be a part of its future.

In the years since the attacks, I have dedicated my life to telling the stories of the people who lived through that day. I have written books, articles, and speeches about the attacks, and I have worked with survivors to help them heal.

I believe that it is important to remember what happened on September 11th, and to learn from the mistakes that were made. We must never forget the victims of the attacks, and we must always work to prevent future tragedies.
